Overview

Academic essays fall into four core types: argumentative, expository, narrative, and descriptive. However, this micro-module will challenge you to think about different types of plagiarism, and to think carefully about situations that may be less clear. There are eight situations to consider, each followed by expert feedback. Each one might be referred to as "an essay" and yet each one. Abstract: In this session we'll be exploring how a range of micro writing tasks can activate language, encourage communication and aid class cohesion. We'll be looking in particular, but not exclusively, at multi-level secondary classrooms and the challenges they bring. The kind of micro-writing. Micro-writing, defined as the production of writing that consistently expresses a complete idea in a few words, emerges as a tactic for students to learn to navigate and gain confidence in organizing and capturing their thoughts. Choosing the right essay type depends entirely on.
