

Price of Buried Optical Cable Clamps

Article Overview

Buried optical cable clamps typically range from $1 to $15 per unit, depending on type, material, and supplier.

Overview

Buried optical cable clamps are essential for securing fiber optic cables in underground installations, protecting them from stress, bending, and environmental damage. They are commonly made from UV-resistant thermoplastics, galvanized steel, aluminum alloy, or stainless steel, with reinforced plastic or metal variants preferred for outdoor or high-stress environments. The choice of material affects both durability and cost.

Types and Applications

- Tension Clamps: Designed to maintain the tensile state of the fiber cable, often used in underground conduits or along utility poles. These clamps are sturdy, easy to install, and prevent signal degradation.
- Suspension Clamps: Used to bear vertical loads and allow slight movement of the cable, suitable for overhead or partially buried installations.
- Specialized Outdoor Clamps: Infused with water-repellent materials for high-humidity or underground environments, protecting cables from moisture ingress.

Price Considerations

- Plastic clamps: Typically $1–$5 per unit for standard sizes suitable for low-stress underground installations.
