

Which manufacturers produce armored fiber optic patch cords

Article Overview

Leading manufacturers of armored fiber optic patch cords include Corning, Fibertronics, FS, NEXCONEC, and ZION Communication.

Key Manufacturers and Offerings

Corning produces armored patch cords featuring an interlocked stainless steel tube over buffered fiber, surrounded by aramid yarn and an outer jacket. These cords are designed for high durability, crush resistance, rodent protection, and are available in both single-mode and multimode configurations . Fibertronics, Inc. offers armored fiber optic patch cables that combine rugged steel armor with flexibility, allowing them to bend freely without compromising performance. They provide single-mode and multimode options, various connector types, and custom lengths for demanding environments . FS (Fiberstore) supplies a diverse range of armored fiber patch cables engineered for stable transmission and protection in harsh conditions, supporting industrial and data center applications . NEXCONEC manufactures double-armored patch cords with steel tape and aramid yarn for enhanced crush resistance and tensile strength. Their products are suitable for industrial, outdoor-to-indoor telecom networks, FTTx, and FTTH deployments . ZION Communication designs and produces armored fiber patch cords with aramid (Kevlar) yarn for added strength. They offer single-mode and multimode fibers, bend-insensitive options, and customized assemblies to meet specific project requirements .
